

PM Mock 5 — EID Intern · Interrupt & probe

Manager cuts you off · “prove it” · ownership language · 20 min

20 min

Pressure

I not we

EID Intern

Friend should interrupt mid-answer with the pink follow-ups. Train landing a crisp close.

INTERVIEWER Tell me about LogiFlow.

Interrupt at 20s: “Stop. What did you build — not the team?”

YOU SAY

I owned FastAPI ranking pipelines and the delay-risk model (HistGB) — 73.0 / 68.0 delayed recall / 78.3 ROC-AUC — and Docker packaging with the team. Ranking UI was shared; the risk model and serving path were mine.

INTERVIEWER Those numbers look modest. Why should I trust you?

YOU SAY

Because I won't inflate them. Accuracy alone hid missed delays; I moved the story to recall on purpose. I'd rather bring honest metrics a clinician-adjacent team can challenge than a vanity score.

INTERVIEWER So you're an ML person. Can you take a boring backend ticket?

YOU SAY

Yes. Most of LogiFlow ownership was pipelines, APIs, data shape, Docker — the model was one slice. As an EID intern I'll take whatever backlog slice helps the team; I care about shipping tested work.

INTERVIEWER Why GEHC — one minute, then I'll cut you.

At 40s: “So it's just brand?”

YOU SAY

No — brand isn't enough. I want the reliability bar of software near clinical workflows, and EID gives mentorship on a live team. If it were only brand I'd apply anywhere.

INTERVIEWER Offer from a product company mid-internship — what do you do?

YOU SAY

I finish commitments. I chose EID for the problem and learning; I don't ghost a team. Any decision after the internship would be after I've delivered here.

INTERVIEWER Weakness — don't give me a humblebrag.

YOU SAY

Early GSC: I over-scoped. We were drowning. I learned to cut to a shippable core. Still watch myself when a cool feature appears — I time-box or park it.

INTERVIEWER Bengaluru. Any family “maybe”?

YOU SAY

No maybe — full duration, on-site, ready on your timeline.

INTERVIEWER Ask me something that isn't stipend or PPO.

YOU SAY

When an EID intern is struggling silently, how do you want them to surface that — and how early?

Pass = short answers, “I” ownership, honest metrics, Bengaluru certainty. Fail = we-we-we, vanity accuracy, PPO USP, stipend questions.

Public LinkedIn / GFG / company posts only · Kavya Bhatiya prep · not affiliated with GE HealthCare · do not name-drop LinkedIn in the interview